ANA INVESTIGATES: ADAPTIVE DEEP BRAIN STIMULATION

Listen to the latest episode of ANA Investigates: Adaptive DBS. Join Dr. Karlo Lizarraga, Associate Professor of Neurology at the University of Rochester, as he interviews our guest, Dr. Helen Bronte-Stewart, John E. Cahill Family Professor of Neurology at Stanford University.

Together they explore how adaptive deep brain stimulation (aDBS) personalizes therapy for Parkinson's disease by adjusting stimulation in real time based on a patient's brain signals. The conversation covers the science behind aDBS, its clinical impact, and what this milestone means for the future of neuromodulation.

NCS RESEARCH GRANTS IN NEUROCRITICAL AND PEDIATRIC NEUROLOGY

NEUR  CRITICAL
CARE SOCIETY

The Neurocritical Care Society (NCS) is now accepting applications for two dynamic two-year research grants designed to drive innovation and improve outcomes in neurocritical and pediatric neurology. These awards provide investigators with the resources to explore groundbreaking approaches and generate foundational data for future federal or foundation funding.

The Technology Integration in Neurocritical Care Grant supports teams developing novel technologies to enhance care in the neuroscience ICU or advance neuroprognostication, with multicenter and multidisciplinary proposals strongly encouraged. The Electroencephalographic Biomarkers of Consciousness After Pediatric Acute Brain Injury Grant empowers researchers to explore EEG markers of injury and recovery in children, helping shape the next generation of pediatric neurocritical care.

Key dates for both grants are Letter of Intent due March 1, 2026, invitations for full applications on March 9, 2026, and full applications due April 30, 2026, if invited.
